International Young Scientists Conference on Molecular and Cell Biology

April 16-17, 2020
IIMCB, Warsaw, Poland

Invitation

On behalf of the organizers and scientific committee we invite you to attend the International Young Scientists Conference on Molecular and Cell Biology. The conference will be held on April 16-17, 2020 in Warsaw, Poland.

This two-day international conference is dedicated to PhD, Master and undergraduate students interested in molecular and cell biology. Within this meeting we seek to create opportunities for early-stage scientists to present their research and experiences in science. We believe that the ability to talk about your work with similarly inclined people is crucial for self-development. Trying to address this, we decided to continue with Young Scientist Conference meeting and expand it by reaching out to the international scientific community.

We invite you to join us for the meeting during which we will host five invited keynote speakers, talks by selected applicants and at least two poster sessions. Additionally, as a part of the conference we are organizing a mentoring session, where participants will be able to engage with prominent and established scientists in an informal setting.

How it started

Our student-run initiative started in early 2019 with organization works for the Young Scientists Conference on Molecular and Cell Biology, a 1-day event with a national outreach:

- we gathered >150 young scientists from all over Poland;
- we hosted four top scientists (average h-index = 42.34) as keynote speakers;
- the lectures were evaluated by >95% of the surveyed participants as above average or excellent:

How would you rate the overall level of keynote lectures?
